The Trail of the Sandhill Stag

Ernest Seton-Thompson was a well-respected naturalist and author working for the Government of Manitoba when The Trail of the Sandhill Stag was published by Charles Scribner's Sons, New York, in 1899. Pictured are the frontispiece, title page, and inscription.

Librarian's Picks

Shopping for votes : how politicians choose us and we choose them / Susan Delacourt. Madeira Park, British Columbia : Douglas & McIntyre, 2013. 351 pages. JL 195 Del

From Quill and Quire (September 2013):

The problem with political advertising – from television commercials to micro-targeted get-out-the-vote efforts – is that, when properly applied, it works. [...] The success of marketing innovations in Canadian political campaigns ensures that such tactics will be even more prevalent in the future, especially as a smaller percentage of the public pays attention to traditional forms of news.

Much like Sasha Issenberg's The Victory Lab, the engaging Shopping for Votes provides a compendium of the latest vote-courting techniques used by political operatives from all parties, but especially the federal Conservatives and New Democrats. Delacourt's findings will not come as a massive surprise, but her vision is different from the one espoused by political pundits. Delacourt shows readers that the process of getting people to commit to one party or another is complex, and election coverage often lacks the sophistication of the campaigns being covered.

The strongest section, which draws on Delacourt's talents as a reporter, focuses on recent efforts by the Conservatives and NDP to target voters interested in their policies. The early chapters, by contrast, provide useful historical context for the role of advertising in politics, revisiting trailblazers like Dalton Camp, Keith Davey, and Martin Goldfarb. This history comes at the expense of a greater exploration of why voters and politicians have come to see their relationship as so transactional. Delacourt shies away from confronting this topic.

At one point, she writes, "It's probably not an accident that marketing-style politics were pioneered by market-friendly politicians..." Of course it isn't an accident. It may be the most important development in politics in this country in the last 40 years, and it should have played a greater role in this otherwise admirable book. – Dan Rowe, a professor of journalism in Toronto.

Whatever happened to the music teacher? : how government decides and why / Donald J. Savoie. Montréal : McGill-Queen's University Press, 2013. xi, 324 p. JL 86 .D42 Sav

From McGill-Queen's University Press:

Thirty years ago, Anglo-American politicians set out to make the public sector look like the private sector. These reforms continue today, ultimately seeking to empower elected officials to shape policies and pushing public servants to manage operations in the same manner as their private-sector counterparts. In Whatever Happened to the Music Teacher?, Donald Savoie provides a nuanced account of how the Canadian federal government makes decisions. Savoie argues that the traditional role of public servants advising governments on policy has been turned on its head, and that evidence-based policy making is no longer valued as it once was. [...] As a result, public servants have lost their way and are uncertain about how they should assess management performance, how they should generate policy advice, how they should work with their political leaders, and how they should speak truth to political power - even within their own departments. Savoie demonstrates how recent management reforms in government have caused a steep rise in the overhead cost of government, as well as how the notion that public administration could be made to operate like the private sector has been misguided and costly to taxpayers. [...] Whatever Happened to the Music Teacher? is a realistic portrayal of how policy decisions are made and how actors and institutions interact with one another and exposes the complexities, contradictions present in Canadian politics and governance.

The fast-changing Arctic : rethinking Arctic security for a warmer world / edited by Barry Scott Zellen. Calgary : University of Calgary Press, c2013. xi, 395 p. UA 880 Fas

From Book News:

The Arctic is being transformed not only by environmental changes, but also by global economics as Zellen and his contributors point out in The Fast-Changing Arctic. The discussion is also about military, strategic, diplomatic, and security issues from Asian, North American, and European viewpoints, as gas, oil, and mineral prospectors arrive to survey the area, along with commercial shipping interests. Particularly interested are the five countries that ring the Arctic: the US, Canada, Norway, and Denmark (through Greenland). Next come Sweden, Iceland, and Finland, who have territory within the Arctic Circle. All have rewritten their policies for the High North in order to nail down their rights as countries from the south call for a piece of the action. Their assignment is "to balance opportunities for the exploitation of resources with care for the environment and the rights of Arctic residents, while ensuring the region is free from conflict"-- a seemingly tall order, which the sanguine Lieutenant Governor of Alaska refers to as the "Arctic Renaissance". [...] This is a valuable book for students of strategic studies, political science, and international relations, as well as those concerned about the future of the changing Arctic.

Privatize this? : assessing the opportunities and costs of privatization / Richard A. McGowan. Sant Barbara, Calif. : Praeger, c2011. x, 206 p. HD 3850 McG

From Book News:

McGowan (economics, Boston College) examines questions about the efficiency and effectiveness of privatization. Reflecting the author's background and training in business strategy, the book focuses on the strategic advantages and disadvantages of privatization for government and private firms. The book begins by investigating why governments operate monopolies for certain industries while allowing the private sector to dominate other sectors of the economy, and then analyzes various proposals to privatize goods and services that are still being operated by the US government. The author then outlines a model for evaluating the pros and cons of the privatization process; this model is used to analyze nine real-world case studies in the US and other countries, such as Argentina's oil industry, port facilities in Canada, state-controlled liquor stores in Pennsylvania and New Hampshire, and public transportation systems in various major US cities. The book concludes with discussion of the government bailout of General Motors as an example of hybrid privatization/nationalization.

Seeds, science, and struggle : the global politics of transgenic crops / Abby Kinchy. Cambridge, MA : The MIT Press, c2012. xvii, 219 p. SB 123.57 Kin

From Choice Reviews:

This work, part of the "Food, Health, and the Environment" series, is a close study of the cultural and sociological conflicts inherent in changing agriculture through radical transformation with transgenic organisms. Many books discuss the potential environmental risks of transgenics and, through what Kinchy terms "scientization," demonstrate that the scientifically quantifiable risks are small. Though technically correct, this answer is unsatisfying to persons whose culture and worldview elevate the integrity of the organism and ecosystem above that of a source of nutrients. For example, some cultures may view maize as sacred, and organic agriculture may be morally and theologically based. Political conflict arises when scientization ignores this social reality. This book provides well-written, focused, in-depth studies based on the author's personal interviews with participants in cases of genetically modified maize in Mexico and canola in Canada.
